

Project Humanbeingsfirst <humanbeingsfirst@gmail.com>

My general political concern on the NIST report that its detractors might be missing!

1 message

Project Humanbeingsfirst.org <humanbeingsfirst@gmail.com>

Fri, Aug 22, 2008 at 5:27 AM

To: Kevin Ryan <kncryan@msn.com>

Cc: Richard Cook <rickycook21@hotmail.com>, Peter, Kevin Barrett <kbarrett@merr.com>

Dear Kevin - I posted this comment someplace, and I thought I might share it with you so that if you deem it appropriate, you might use it as needful. I haven't read the report itself, only read what others have written. This is a speculative political perspective. Regards, Zahir.

On the latest NIST report on the destruction of WTC-7
August 22, 2008.

The sense one might make of this if one extended the trend of broader and broader hate speech laws, this new official NIST report may be a devilish setup in the making for anyone calling 9/11 an inside job, or that the buildings were controlled demolitions, as hate speech. This means possibly jail time, fines, and even the charge of "terrorism"! It is almost moving towards the equivalent of revisionism in Europe vis a vis the holocaust question. As most know, questioning the official version of "events" is putting people behind bars or fined on the grounds of "hate speech"! EU nations already have such laws on the books!

It is especially a crime in Germany, the perpetrators of primal-crimes, to now question the official story as set by the victors regarding it. This has enabled a lifetime of mileage extraction from it. Can one not see the parallels in the United States for 911 - its primal-crime and the lifetime of mileage extraction that is planned from it?

Instead of dismissing the NIST report and its coverage in the media as fraudulent, it might be prudent to attempt to preempt this by not attributing "stupidity" to official stupid looking things but treating them as possibly nefarious for some other more subtle agenda.

Everyday tyranny is coming to the USA and its enablment is piece-wise, piece-meal, baby-steps at a time, each step a setup for the next one, and once taken, become pretty much irreversible!

While I haven't read the NIST report, one ought to take any output of an official organization like NIST seriously in the afore-stated context. I can't imagine a normally stellar organization with a great reputation for science publishing obvious nonsense to begin with, if they feared they might someday (within their own lifetimes) have to retract it! This is here to stay, and therefore, it is important to ponder why would they publish such an obviously flawed report if their leadership didn't foresee it being shored up in the foreseeable future with other external "forces" - in this case hate-speech laws that would prevent anyone questioning it!

Be forewarned - the enemy is far more devious than most give them credit for.

Or maybe I give them too much credit - but it is better to over-estimate their ingeniousness for depravity than to be surprised by it!

Zahir Ebrahim
Project Humanbeingsfirst.org
<http://humanbeingsfirst.org>
